Up, Up & Away

Soar above the treetops on an open cockpit (non-enclosed) Quicksilver MXL II, Sport two-place trainer. This ultralight-type aircraft flies low and slow, averaging between 500 and 1,000 feet above the ground. It's the kind of flying the Wright Brothers would recognize. Traditional controls and a very basic (but sturdy) airframe make this 'seat-of-the-pants' flying.

“We’ll fly for one hour, starting in Warrenton and heading anywhere you want. See your house from the air (as long as it's not inside TSA controlled airspace), skim the Blue Ridge, and make a few landings at local airports.” Intercom communications between pilot and passenger.
